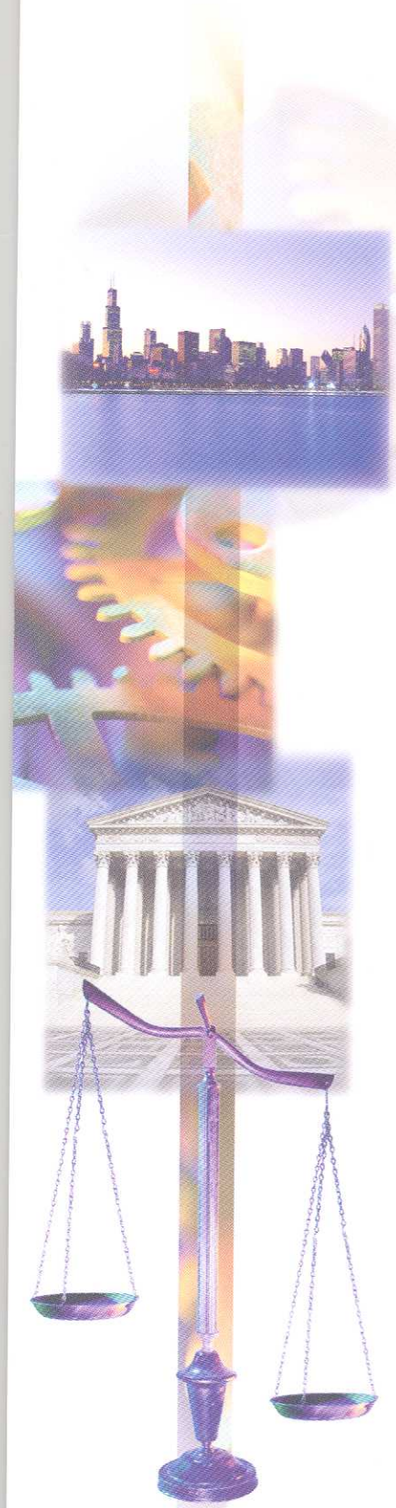
THE JOHN MARSHALL LAW SCHOOL CENTER FOR

47th Annual Conference on Developments in

February 28, 2003 Chicago, Illinois



Message from the Center Directors

Dear Colleagues:

Although the economy has slowed significantly in recent years, technological advances and global business developments have kept intellectual property law in the forefront of legal specialties. The practice areas encompassed by intellectual property law continue to expand and the laws protecting these expanding areas continue to develop and to change.

New technology, international treaties and implementing legislation, judicial decisions and economic considerations have added to the expansion not only of the areas of law encompassed by the term "intellectual property," but in the very nature of the practice itself.

The 47th Annual Conference on Intellectual Property Law Developments, sponsored by the Center for Intellectual Property Law at The John Marshall Law School, continues the tradition established more than four decades ago – of assisting practitioners in keeping current with these developments and changes through the finest in continuing legal education programming. The John Marshall Law School Annual Conference also provides an opportunity to meet new colleagues and renew existing relationships — all in an informal and relaxed environment in a city with the second largest concentration of IP practitioners in the country.

This year's Program Chair, Mark V. B. Partridge, (Pattishall, McAuliffe, Newbury, Hilliard & Geraldson) has done a great job in identifying important, cutting-edge topics and in selecting speakers who are tops in their field.

Please review this brochure and we are certain that you will agree that the 2003 Annual Conference is an event not to be missed.

Sincerely,

James R. Sweeney,
Director

Michele A. Bridges,
Associate Director
